Mr. Editor:

You have provided an admirable service for the citizens of Appomattox County by printing newsletters from Dan Daniel in your newspaper. Thereby, you have reached people with Dan Daniel's ideas who might not otherwise be informed about them.

The article in this week's Times-Virginian was particularly outstanding and informative on one of the most vital questions in this country.

I, personally, wish that this article could be read by every family the United States, since it concerns every citizen. Government bureaucracy and the attempt to socialize the country can only be combatted if the citizenry is informed.

Every citizen should be appreciative to both you and Congressman Daniel for the rendering of this valuable service.

Sincerely,
G. P. Brannon

Dear Concerned People of Appomattox:

Friday, May 10, our Board of Supervisors will need your support. Why? On the Agenda at eleven o'clock the return of the Music Festival will be brought before the Board.

After knowing what happened in Richmond, Va., last Saturday, April 27, I am sure that you are aware that Appomattox County can suffer the same ill effects is we allow the Music Festival to be held in our vicinity.

You might ask why I am so concerned about the Festival. My answer is: As a teacher, I have always been involved in activities affecting our Youth, and I definitely feel that the return of the Music Festival can have very detrimental effects.

If you are interested in keeping our county the best in the State, please give the Board of Supervisors your backing by being present on Friday, May 10, at eleven o'clock.

Sincerely,
Claudine O'Brien

The Sunday School Lesson

Comment on the International Sunday School lesson for Sunday, May 12, 1974.
Topic: The Gospel Confronts Culture
Scripture: Acts 18-19

I do not account my life of any value nor as precious to myself, if only I may accomplish my course and the ministry which I have received from the Lord Jesus, to testify to the gospel of the grace of God. Acts 20:24.

In its account of Paul's extensive mission preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. The Acts leaves no question but that a major result of acceptance of the new faith was the transformation in the believer's life. Not all who professed the gospel Paul preached changed their attitudes or their ways of life, as those read the apostle's First Letter to the Corinthians and other letters know. But many did, and a change to conform to the teachings of Jesus and the guidance of the Holy Spirit continued a prime objective of Paul and other early Christian preachers.

Indeed this transformation of life often took place because the believer realized its necessity and wanted to make the change. He saw his old way of life, his old attitudes as antogonistic to God's purpose and contrary to His will. In the whole-heartedness of their new commitment, they wanted to bring their lives into accord with the divine standards. So it was a feature of their new profession that they cast off the old ways as they sought to live a new life in Christ.

Luke, the author of The Acts, goes into more detail about the change which some believers in Ephesus experienced than about transformations which took place elsewhere. It went without saying that the idolatrous should forsake their idols that the licentious should reform their ways. In its decision that Gentiles might become Christians without becoming Jewish proselytes, the Jerusalem Church enjoined only that Gentile converts "abstain from what has been offered to idols and from blood and from what is strangled and from unchastity."

There is an additional significance in recording the transformation which took place among some of the Ephesian believers. Their transformation affected their pocketbooks. Evidently a sizable number of Paul's converts had been a practicing magic for a fee. In a society predominantly ignorant, naive, and poor, the practitioner of magic arts could count on a large clientele. Magic, as we have seen in the case of the Philippian slave girl possessed of an evil spirit who gave her powers of divination, was a profitable employment in the first-century world. These magicians who had been converted realized the inconsistency of their practice of magic with their profession of the gospel. They voluntarily abandoned their devious trade, in testimony whereof they burned their books of magic publicly. Their action recalls the transformation in the life of Zacchaeus, the rich tax collector of Jericho, when he met Jesus.

Through the ages the gospel has come into conflict with economic interests. This is not because the gospel is inherently anti-wealth, but because all too many in their pursuit of wealth engage in wrong and evil practices to gain it. The Ephesian magicians were exploiting the poor and ignorant, and these have been targets of exploitation through the centuries. The gospel, when it is proclaimed uncompromisingly, conflicts strongly with exploitation.

In another instance, the preaching of the gospel in Ephesus came into conflict with economic interests. In that city was the fabulous Temple of Artemis, or Diana, one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. To it came in droves pilgrims, worshippers of the moon goddess and goddess of the chase in the Olympian pantheon. In consequence there developed in Ephesus a thriving trade in making silver images, or idols, of Diana, which were sold to these visitors. The preaching of the gospel with its appeal to abandon idols for the living God cut this business drastically, and the silversmiths stirred up a riot in opposition to the gospel. The contrast between the magicians who accepted the gospel and the silversmiths who did not should not be lost on the student of this lesson. To the silversmith, money was the prime objective of life.
